ECHOES ON THE ALPS.

Here we bring to you, arithmetic views of the real Alps and the Alpines. Fancy figure skating right around old St Moritz.

All in all, there is tobogganing, speed skaters and Alpine traffic cops. Everything works out fine until a fast toboggan comes along and flattens the traffic officer.

Two miles higher up, the Alpine climbers are pulling up Ella Elephant. But she is a rather awkward girl, so they just decide to leave her behind and cut the rope. Ella goes rolling down the Alps. Eight miles below she crashes through the ice of the Shrewsbury River and almost drowns light harmless cats that were fishing thereabouts.

Explorer Alfalfa and his St Bernard were looking things over, and spied a rabbit, so decided to give chase. This doesn't work out so well, for old Al slips out over a cliff and struggles in the air, he almost saves himself, when the dog and rabbit come along and down they go, CRASH to the bottom of the chasm, and then through the ice.

And only two hours later while Al is resting up and also fastening his skis a mountain goat comes along and butts him so hard he skis from precipice to precipice, finally sliding down a mountain side, right amongst a family of bears that were fishing through the ice.

This seems to make the bears very, very angry and they all turn in and chase the poor old delapidated, flatfooted farmer over the ice and snow into the great beyond. And that, dear friends is all there is, there isn't anymore.

Aesop Says: "Many a man who fails has taken a drop to much."
